About

Alberto J. DeJesus is the CEO and founder of DeJesus Industries, a dynamic and multifaceted construction company with a growing presence in Massachusetts, New York, Rhode Island, South Florida, and Western Pennsylvania. The company, envisioned in 2008, draws inspiration from the fictional military defense contractor Stark Industries in Marvel's original Iron Man movie, reflecting a blend of innovation and ambition. This reference extends to Lockheed Martin, symbolizing a commitment to excellence and a vision of large-scale impact.

Founded from his early ambitions, DeJesus Industries has become renowned for its meticulous execution of high-end residential, commercial, and municipal construction projects. Under Alberto's leadership, the company has evolved into a minority-owned, OSHA and EPA/HUD-certified enterprise known for its distinctive style, innovative approach, and unwavering commitment to architectural integrity and compliance with construction codes.

Alberto's journey into the construction industry began with early success in high school and continued through his academic achievements at Boston University, where he earned a bachelor's degree in Political Science while managing over $1.8 million in Massachusetts residential construction contracts. His entrepreneurial skills were further honed after being accepted into the Goldman Sachs 10,000 Small Businesses program, positioning him as a Goldman Sachs Scholar. This experience has propelled both his personal development and DeJesus Industries' growth, making the company part of the prestigious Goldman Sachs 10,000 Small Businesses network.

In addition to his leadership role at DeJesus Industries, Alberto is the author of American Builder: Old Money Architecture, a recently published book that explores the architectural styles and cultural significance of America's most iconic and prestigious homes. His deep passion for architecture and history is reflected in his writing, further establishing him as a thought leader in the field.

Beyond his core construction work, Alberto has been deeply involved in mergers, acquisitions, and the financing of high-cash-flow construction companies. His strategic vision includes rebranding and marketing these entities under the DeJesus name, further expanding his influence in the industry. His work has garnered attention from influential figures across various fields, including heads of state, business magnates, and tech innovators.

Throughout his career, Alberto has interacted with a diverse range of notable figures and drawn inspiration from his travels and experiences. These include visiting the historic childhood home of President John F. Kennedy in Brookline, Massachusetts, and attending a fundraising dinner at Mar-a-Lago, the iconic residence of President Donald J. Trump. These experiences have shaped his insights into American architecture and real estate, informing the perspectives presented in this book.

DeJesus Industries is more than just a construction company; it is a platform for creativity, innovation, and social impact. As the company continues to grow, it bridges the gap between construction, social responsibility, and political engagement. Alberto J. DeJesus is not only a builder of structures but also an innovator and a visionary, shaping a legacy that intertwines American history, politics, and culture with the evolving landscape of architectural excellence.
